Look at the clues

The unfamiliar account knew about the path. It asked which gate Ari used and asked him to keep the message between them.

What could Ari read for himself?

What did he still have to guess?

What could he do while he was unsure?

Use the story to answer. You can circle a clue in the book, say what you noticed, write it down or sketch what Ari could do next. You can pass on any question.

Show someone you trust

Imagine a character in a story receives a message asking them to keep a conversation secret. What could they show or say to an adult they trust?

Try a starting line.
“Can you read this with me?”
“I got a message and I’m unsure what to do.”
“Can you give me a minute, then help me?”

Write a different line, draw how the character could ask, point to one of the examples or act out the scene using fictional details. If the first adult is unavailable, who else could the character go to?

Another adult the character could ask
